

SpencerFane®

Diana Lyn Curtis Shutzer Comments on AI Export Controls in Law360

Spencer Fane attorney Diana Shutzer was recently quoted in the article Legal Tech Co. Drops Suit After Anthropic Embargo Is Lifted, published by Law360.

Diana, along with Spencer Fane colleagues Nick Solosky and Greg Ewing, represented Legion LegalTech Corp., in the matter. She discusses the dismissal of Legion's lawsuit following the restoration of international access to Anthropic's AI models. She explains that the case raised broader questions about government authority, regulatory processes, and the impact of AI export control decisions on companies developing and using AI technologies. Diana highlights the importance of establishing clear guidelines for companies navigating the evolving AI regulatory landscape.

"This case was never just about Legion — it was about whether a federal agency can shut off commercial AI infrastructure without warning, without evidence, and without process," Diana said. "Until policymakers establish clear, enforceable rules of the road, every company building on American AI faces the same threat of arbitrary disruption."

At the firm, Diana provides practical, business-focused counsel in the areas of government contracts, export controls, regulatory compliance, and federal construction. A seasoned attorney with prior in-house experience managing compliance for a large national federal contractor, she brings an insider's perspective and a deep understanding of the complex regulatory challenges facing companies at the intersection of government contracting and emerging technologies.

Read the full article here. Please note, a subscription may be required.