SpencerFane®

Nashville Post Recognizes Sam Jackson as an 'In Charge' Legal Leader

Spencer Fane is pleased to announce attorney Sam Jackson has made the Nashville Post "In Charge 2025: Legal" list for his new role as Office Managing Partner of the firm's Nashville office.

In Charge is a mainstay Nashville Post feature that highlights "the people that make [the] city work" across a wide range of industry sectors. Sam joins fellow Spencer Fane attorneys Stacey Garrett Koju and Ed Yarbrough in receiving this recognition of his distinguished legal leadership.

At the firm, Sam provides proactive legal counsel to business management leaders in human resources counseling, employment litigation, and traditional labor law, identifying risks and equipping clients with the tools necessary to minimize the time and resources spent on costly litigation. He practices in the areas of labor and employment and education law, focusing on a variety of legal issues including employment of licensed and classified employees, employee contracts, employee and student discipline, employee and student rights, special education and disability accommodation, First Amendment issues, sexual harassment and civil rights matters, desegregation, tort liability, school finance and taxation, and school construction.

Learn more about this distinction here.