

Paul Jacobson Provides Insight on OSHA Enforcement Priorities for COVID-Related Violations

Spencer Fane attorney Paul Jacobson recently outlined trends in Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) citations resulting from COVID-related investigations for online publication TLNT.

OSHA recently issued guidance summarizing the safety standards most often cited. In a separate release, OSHA announced that the number of issued citations for COVID-related violations has topped 200, totaling nearly $3 million as of Nov. 5.

“In other words, even without promulgating COVID-specific requirements, OSHA has plenty of regulatory authority to cite employers in connection with COVID hazards in the workplace,” Paul explained in the article.

To read the full article, please click here.