

Rachel Carr Shreves Examines Cannabis Rescheduling Implications in Missouri Banker

Spencer Fane attorney Rachel Carr Shreves wrote the article Cannabis Rescheduling to Schedule III – Key Implications for Your Business, recently published by The Missouri Banker.

In Rachel's article, originally a blog post, she explores the potential implications of the federal government's proposed cannabis rescheduling initiative. She outlines how the change could affect businesses across the cannabis industry and related sectors while highlighting key regulatory and operational considerations. The article provides an overview of what organizations should watch as the rescheduling process moves forward.

"Cannabis rescheduling represents a significant policy shift, but practical impacts will unfold gradually through administrative rulemaking, litigation and state-level responses. Although rescheduling has yet to occur, now is a good time to consider potential industry changes that might be coming," Rachel wrote.

At the firm, Rachel focuses on complex financial matters, including bankruptcy, regulatory compliance, and commercial lending. She brings a well-rounded perspective to clients navigating distressed assets and compliance challenges across industries.

Read Rachel's full article here.