Spencer Fane Sees Continued Growth in Phoenix with Addition to Real Estate Practice

Spencer Fane LLP is pleased to welcome Mitchell Anderson to the firm's Phoenix office as an associate in the Real Estate Practice Group.

Mitch advises real estate developers, investors, publicly traded real estate investment trusts, and residential homebuilders in a broad range of real estate matters, including transactions involving multiple asset classes. His practice focuses on real estate development, borrower-side financing, and the acquisition and disposition of real estate assets, including experience with multifamily, industrial, retail, residential, and data center properties. He provides practical, business-oriented counsel to help clients navigate complex transactions, manage risk, and achieve their development objectives.

"Mitch brings valuable experience representing sophisticated real estate clients across a variety of asset classes and transactional matters," said David E. Funkhouser III, office managing partner for Spencer Fane in Phoenix. "His experience with real estate development, financing, and institutional real estate transactions will be a great addition to our Phoenix real estate team and further strengthen the services we provide to our clients."

After completing his bachelor's degree in economics at Brigham Young University, Mitch earned his Juris Doctor summa cum laude from the University of Arizona's James E. Rogers College of Law.

Prior to entering private practice, Mitch served as a legal extern within the Arizona Supreme Court Staff Attorneys' Office, where he gained significant experience researching and analyzing court documents, drafting memoranda, and assisting in broader administrative processes.
