Overview

Brian Schoenborn counsels families and private businesses on multiple elements of business law, business succession, and estate planning, frequently serving as outside general counsel to provide valuable input related to improving operational efficiency or taking advantage of transactional opportunities. Specifically, he helps prevent problems where multiple elements of business law converge while supporting clients' current and future planning needs and prioritizing strong foundations rooted in common-sense solutions.

With a comprehensive business background spanning more than two decades, Brian's value-oriented practice capitalizes on strong relationships, visionary strategies, and creative leadership. He has notably been an owner and board member of software technology businesses, real estate development companies, community banks, and sports and entertainment entities, and believes his expansive business experience is key to his current legal success.

Brian frequently works with startups and high-growth businesses and their leaders to identify hidden opportunities and develop strategies which prioritize individual objectives and lay the groundwork for upward growth trajectories. Throughout all focus areas, he quickly and efficiently navigates around factors which typically stall progress to consistently achieve favorable outcomes.

Additionally, Brian has a distinguished track record in the niche area of hockey business law, regularly assisting hockey-related businesses, organizations, and families. Over the past two decades, he has owned six U.S. Hockey League teams, founded and co-owns the Sioux Fall Stampede, and has worked in the development, ownership, and operation of sports facilities throughout the upper Midwest.
