Overview

Casey Malloy represents clients in commercial litigation matters in state courts, federal courts, and arbitration at the trial and appellate levels. Casey's clients appreciate his ability to solve problems, practical approach to litigation, and experience in the courtroom.

Casey's litigation experience includes contract disputes, construction disputes, government investigations, health care disputes, and intellectual property matters. His clients include employers seeking to enforce non-solicitation and non-compete agreements, construction companies defending claims related to various projects, and health care companies facing challenges with billing practices.

Prior to attending law school, Casey served in the U.S. Army as an Armor Officer, where he led a scout platoon on NATO training exercises in Eastern Europe and was the Distinguished Honor Graduate of the Army Reconnaissance Course. He has worked pro bono on behalf of servicemembers and veterans and, in 2022, notably earned the American Bar Association Military Pro Bono Project Outstanding Services Award.
