Overview

Colin Goodman defends clients in the health care industry against medical malpractice lawsuits and actions involving peer review. He provides thoughtful and focused advocacy and has successfully defended clients at each stage of the litigation process. Additionally, he advises and represents health care entities and providers regarding compliance with Federal and state law, licensing issues, billing, contract negotiations, and business disputes. He also assists in navigating the unique intricacies of False Claims Act litigation.

Colin believes in putting in the work early to prevent and avoid conflicts and other issues. As his experience demonstrates, he is passionate about vigorously defending lawsuits and working towards a favorable outcome for clients once the need arises.

Colin graduated from the University of Notre Dame, where he earned his Bachelor of Arts in political science in 2011. He then attended Loyola University Chicago School of Law, earning his law degree and health law certificate in 2015.
