Overview

Jessica Lujan represents clients in corporate governance disputes, commercial landlord-tenant disputes, employment discrimination defense, breach of contract actions, breach of fiduciary duty matters, and other business torts. With a passion for resolving complex legal issues and a devotion to personalized service, she works to find the most efficient and cost-effective route to victory in any legal dispute with open and responsive communication at every turn.

Jessica has successfully defended and prosecuted appeals to the Nevada Supreme Court and Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals, oftentimes without the need for oral argument as the result of her exemplary research and writing skills. She is also, notably, a first-chair trial attorney, deftly navigating every stage of litigation when the need arises.

Prior to entering private practice, Jessica was a law clerk to the Hon. James C. Mahan, Federal District Judge for the District of Nevada, where she gained a sense of ease and familiarity while navigating the complicated federal court system. Her comprehensive knowledge of the federal and state courts' procedural rules makes her an ideal attorney to assist out-of-state firms as local counsel in any Nevada lawsuit.
