Overview

Martin Wing helps employers and tax-exempt organizations navigate complex benefits, tax, and governance matters so they can maintain compliance, manage risk, and achieve their organizational objectives.

For more than 35 years, Martin has advised employers on the design, implementation, and administration of employee benefit programs. His practice includes health and welfare plans, retirement plans, fringe benefit arrangements, and executive compensation matters. Employers also rely on his experience to identify and correct compliance issues in employee benefit plans, including through voluntary Internal Revenue Service correction programs.

A significant portion of Martin's practice is devoted to representing tax-exempt organizations. He advises business leagues, voluntary employee beneficiary associations, and other nonprofit entities on tax, governance, operational, and compliance matters. Martin also has extensive experience counseling museums on issues involving collections management, acquisitions, dispositions, loans, employment matters, governance, and donor relations.

In addition to his client work, Martin regularly speaks to civic and professional organizations on taxation, employee benefits, and related compliance topics.
