Overview

Taylor Reeves represents clients in a wide range of general liability matters, ensuring smooth business operations that align with short- and long-term objectives while preserving finances, relationships, and reputations through robust litigation tactics.

Taylor brings a unique perspective to her legal work, drawing from her background as a former Clark County Deputy District Attorney. She is well-versed in navigating complex and often highly sensitive matters through transparent communication with her clients and powerful advocacy, traits which have shaped her current approach to law. During her time as a prosecutor, she developed strong listening and advocacy skills by working closely with clients.

Prior to entering private practice, Taylor gained invaluable courtroom experience through internships with the Clark County District Attorney's Office and the Honorable Cynthia Giuliani. After law school, she clerked for the Honorable Joe Hardy in the Eighth Judicial District Court where she learned all aspects of civil and criminal procedure.
